For more information or any help, please contact the people with the yellow T-shirts.

4 Internet connection

You will have internet access in the conference venue. Connect to the network FSE2024 (WIFI) where no login/password is needed.

5 Pubs in Leuven

There are close to 200 cafes and bars in Leuven. The most famous ones are located on the Oude Markt (Old Market Square).

6 Tourism in Leuven

The city of Leuven has a very complete website with lots of practical and tourist information (<http://www.leuven.be>). The Leuven Tourist Office Leuven is situated in the Townhall Leuven, Naamsestraat 1, Leuven.

6.1 Five Highlights in Leuven

The following five historical sites are not to be missed during your stay in Leuven.

Grote Markt (Great Market Square)

The Grote Markt contains the City Hall, the Round Table and the Saint-Peter's church.

Tradition has it that the first Town Hall of Leuven was situated on the Old Market Square. The second was located on the Great Market Square of Leuven. It had its place in a row of houses in front of St. Peter's Church, but outside the present building line. The construction of the present Town Hall started in 1439.

The Town Hall has three main stories, lined with pointed Gothic windows on the three sides visible from the Markt. At the angles of the roof are octagonal turrets pierced with slits allowing for the passage of light. Statues in canopied niches are distributed all over the building. The corbels supporting the statues are carved with Biblical scenes in high relief. While the niches and corbels are original with the building, the 236 statues themselves are relatively recent, dating from after 1850. Those of the first floor represent personages of importance in the local history of the city; those of the second, patron saints and symbolic figures; those of the third, the Counts of Leuven and Dukes of Brabant from various ages.

The main façade has an entrance staircase, and two portals in the center, above which are figures of Saint Peter (left) and Madonna and Child (right), the former in compliment to the patron of the church opposite.

The interior accommodates an interesting collection of artwork, including sculptures by Constantin Meunier and Jef Lambeaux. Inside can also be seen the portraits of the Leuven mayors since 1794.

The Saint-Peter's Church is the oldest in Leuven. It was presumably founded in 986. The first church burnt down in 1176. A new Romanesque church was built with a crypt, an extension, at the back of the choir. The Westwork was flanked by two towers as can be seen the old town seal.

<http://www.leuven.be/>

The Round Table (het Tafelrond) is situated on the east side of Great Market Square. The original building was erected by order of the Municipality in 1479. Strictly speaking it was three houses in one building. The various premises were let out to guilds, drama societies, etc. In 1817 the dilapidated building was pulled down and replaced by a construction in the Empire style. However, the name was kept. After this building had been burnt down in 1914, the National Bank decided in 1921 to reconstruct the original Gothic building. The statues in the niches represent the Governor and the Administrators of the National Bank and regional trades as well.

Leuven Town Hall can be visited every day at 16:00 (Sunday at 12:00); Town Hall guided tour costs 4.00€.

Check: <https://visitleuven.be/en/town-hall/tickets-opening-hours>

Saint-Peter's Church is open Monday to Sunday: 10:00 - 16:30 (except Wednesday).

The Round Table is a private building and cannot be visited.

Oude Markt (Old Market Square)

Is known as the greatest bar of Western Europe. Find out for yourself!

Begijnhof (Great Beguinage)

Situated in the Schapenstraat. The faculty Club restaurant, where the conference dinner will be held, is located in the Beguinage. Take the opportunity to visit the entire site!

This 'Begijnhof', or 'garden of the Begijns', was founded in the 13th century outside the town wall of the time. The oldest houses date from the 16th century when the original houses were replaced by brick structures. The 72 houses are generally named after a saint or a Biblical event. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is early Gothic. The date of construction, 1305, is carved into the right buttress of the north portal. Approximately 300 'Begijns' lived in the 'Begijnhof' in the 17th century. The 'Begijns' or 'Beguines' were women who lived a religious life but kept their own property and supported themselves. They did not make perpetual vows. The movement was very strong throughout the Low Countries. The 'Begijnhof' was taken over by the Welfare Commission in 1925. Except for the church, it was sold to the University in 1962 under the condition that the entire complex was to be restored. A year later the Restoration began under the direction of Professor R. Lemaire. The 'Groot Begijnhof' is now a University residential quarter for students, professors, and employees of the University. Foreign guests are also housed here. There is room for 500 people. The Infirmary of the 'Begijnhof' has been converted into the Faculty Club, a place for the academic, scientific, administrative, and technical staff of the University to meet. The Chièvres Convent (Nr. 39) has been converted into a congress center. On 31th March 2000, it was officially recognised as an UNESCO World Heritage site.

Open: every day

University Library

Situated on the Monseigneur Ladeuzeplein 21.

During the first World War the University library, then houses in the University Hall, was destroyed by fire. A new library building, designed by Whithney Warren in Flemish Renaissance Style and financed by American contributions, was built in 1921. Hundreds of carved stones have been incorporated in the building as reminders of numerous dotations. The central elevation includes busts of Queen Elizabeth, King Albert and Prince Leopold. At the top there is a bas-relief, depicting the fire of the University Hall. The side elevations include statues of the sedes sapientiae and Cardinal Mercier. The library houses more than three million volumes.

The library is open Monday-Friday 9:00 - 19:00, Saturday-Sunday 10:00 - 18:00.

Arenberg Castle

Situated on Kardinaal Mercierlaan in Heverlee.

The site had been the castle of the lords of Heverlee since the 12th century, but this family became impoverished and had to sell the site in 1445 to the Croy family from Picardy. Willem van Croy added to the medieval castle, and donated the Celestine monastery in the castle grounds, now the campus library. Antoon van Croy demolished the medieval castle and completed the current castle in 1515 on the site of a medieval castle, of which he destroyed all but one tower. The architectural style is in large part traditionally Flemish, with sandstone window frames and brick walls, though it has been structurally altered since 1515 and has elements of Gothic, Renaissance and Neo Gothic architecture. Its large corner towers are typical, once surmounted by a German eagle. Charles III of Croy was the last duke, and after his death in 1612 without issue the castle passed to the Arenberg family into which his sister had married, and remained in that family until the First World War. The first manned gas-filled balloon flight in history took off from the front lawn of the castle on November 21, 1783; the balloonist was professor Jan Pieter Minckeleers. Even before the war, the former duke wanted to sell the castle and its grounds to the Catholic University of Leuven, for a reasonable price. However, the castle and park were instead seized by the Belgian government on the outbreak of war and thus it took until 1921 for the university to acquire them, becoming an expanded natural sciences and engineering campus in the style of that of an American university. It is still one of the main campuses of the University, providing facilities for most of the exact sciences. The castle itself is the main building of the Faculty of Engineering and is open to the public.

6.2 Short history of Leuven

Although the first references to the town can be traced back as far as the 9th century and in spite of its strategic location on the river Dyle, it was not until around the 11th-12th century that Leuven began to develop as an important trading centre within the Duchy of Brabant. It was at this time that its first town wall, churches, monasteries and abbeys were built.

The town's once flourishing cloth trade had fallen into decline by the 14th century, but a new golden age dawned with the 15th century. The university was founded, various industrial concerns flourished and the main market square with its fine Gothic town hall was laid out.

Its finely sculpted Town Hall and Saint Peter's church with its magnificent interior which is hung with the famous "Last Supper" by Thierry Bouts, are fine examples of flamboyant Gothic architecture at its best. Dating from the same period are the Cloth Hall, 't Sestich House and many churches, including St Gertrude's with its magnificent choir stalls. Other architectural styles are not quite so much in evidence, but they can still be found. The Romanesque Gate, the Saint Lambert's church and the remains of the first town walls are still clearly in evidence.

The 13th century beguinage complex has cobbled streets and fascinating 17th century houses. The Baroque style abounds in Leuven, from St Michael's church and the interior of the St John the Baptist's church to the unrivalled stucco of the Park Abbey. Both the Park Abbey and the Arenberg Castle are exciting mixtures of architectural styles.

The town still owes much of its character to the numerous university college buildings dating from the 16th and 17th centuries, many of which were renovated in the 18th century. The Van Dale College is pure Renaissance style and the College of the Falcon, Pope's College and the Arras College are neo-classical style. Vlierbeek Abbey is a fine example of this trend. The building of paved roads, the canal in the 18th century and the expansion of the brewery created a great impetus for trade and population growth. Unfortunately, this prosperity came to a sudden end under the reign of Joseph II when the French invaded.

The most significant development for Leuven in the 19th century was the building of the railway station and the construction of Bondgenotenlaan leading to it. The two World Wars in the 20th century destroyed much of Leuven and a great deal of the reconstruction work lasted well into the nineteen-sixties.

Leuven has developed into a well-equipped, modern town with a thriving service industry economy and with a good balance of old and new buildings combining to offer a well-designed infrastructure to suit the demands of today's modern town with a rich tradition.

On January 1st 1995, Leuven became the capital of the province Flemish Brabant. The former province of Brabant was split into Flemish and Walloon Brabant and the metropolitan region of Brussels.

6.3 About the KU Leuven

Situated at the heart of Western Europe, KU Leuven has been a centre of learning for almost six centuries. Founded in 1425 by Pope Martin V, KU Leuven bears the honor of being the oldest Catholic university in the world still in existence and the oldest university in the Low Countries.

In its early days this university was modeled on the universities of Paris, Cologne, and Vienna. In a short time it grew into one of the largest and most renowned universities in Europe. Its academic fame attracted numerous scholars who made valuable contributions to European culture. Allow us to enumerate a few renowned names. In the sixteenth century the humanist Desiderius Erasmus lectured here, where he founded the Collegium Trilingue in 1517 for the study of Hebrew, Latin, and Greek - the first of its kind. The tutor of the young emperor Charles V, Adriaan Cardinal Florensz of Utrecht, was a professor here before being elected in 1522 as the last non-Italian Pope before Pope John Paul II. The philologist, legal scholar, and historian Justus Lipsius taught here for many years. The mathematician Gemma Frisius helped to lay the foundations of modern science and tutored many famous scientists, including the cartographer Gerard Mercator, whose map projection is still in use, the botanist Rembert Dodoens, and the father of modern anatomy, Andreas Vesalius. In a later period, the theses of the Leuven theologian Cornelius Jansenius provoked huge controversy both inside and outside the Church. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, KU Leuven was an important training centre for Roman Catholic intellectuals from Protestant countries. At the end of the Age of Enlightenment, in 1783, the chemist Pieter Jan Minckelers discovered the suitability of coal gas for lighting. In the nineteenth century, at the instigation of Pope Leo XIII, KU Leuven became an important centre of Thomist philosophy.

Not all has been trouble-free, though, in the university's illustrious history. It has had its share of difficulties during the various social and political upheavals in this region from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries. More recently, the two World Wars of the twentieth century deeply scarred the university. In 1914, the University Hall with its precious library was set in flames and 300,000 books were reduced to ashes. Afterwards, an international solidarity campaign with a major American contribution helped construct a new library on the present Ladeuzeplein. Unfortunately this library was burned down in 1940 during the Second World War and this time only 15,000 of its 900,000 volumes were saved. Since then, the university library, and in fact the entire university, has undergone a thorough reconstruction.

The University is located in Flanders, the Dutch-speaking northern part of Belgium. With the Dutch language's steady rise to renewed prominence, the university was eventually split in 1968 into two new universities. The French-speaking Université Catholique de Louvain moved to the newly built campus in Louvain-la-Neuve. The Dutch-speaking Katholieke Universiteit Leuven remained in the historic town of Leuven.
